New advancements in welding technology and mix match between automation technology and welding have led to a substantial increase in demand for welding machines. Welding machine is computer controlled machine and has cutting, welding, tapping and drilling technology. Welding machine significantly reduces chances of human errors and cuts the production cost by 40 to 50% when compared to manual welding. Sales of the welding machines are rising to meet the ever-increasing demand across the world. There are many types of welders that use different types of consumables. The following are some of the most commonly used consumables in the welding. Fluxes and Molybdenum Temperature-controlled welders are the largest contributor to welding machine market in the welding industry. Welders create better quality welds with the aid of fused metal wire to provide good quality welds. Welders equipped with these consumables have a lot of advantages over manual welders. The welding machine market is on the rise because of technological advancements in welding machines and products. Welding systems and equipment are witnessing a technological boom because of increasing demand for better quality welds and better surface finishing for the welds. The welding machine market has seen a hike in sales of the stationary welding machines because of increasing demand for quality welds.

Welding machines are used in many industrial applications such as construction, welding, automotive, machinery, aerospace and defence. According to a research report published by Transparency Market Research, the global welding machine market is expected to reach a value of $2.1 billion by. According to a research by Transparency Market Research, the global welding machine market is expected to reach a value of $2.1 billion by. A substantial increase in demand for welding systems and equipment because of increasing demand for quality welds and better surface finishing. There is a rising demand for welding equipment worldwide because of increasing demand for good quality welds and better surface finishing. Increasing demand for improved design, reduced maintenance cost and better performance and longer life of welds are some of the factors driving growth of the global welding equipment market. increasing demand for quality welding
