While the law does not require an age limit, lawmakers have said that it's an indicator of the mental and physical maturity of an offender. It would also allow them to better determine if an offender is a sex offender, as they do not believe they are responsible for the sexual acts they commit. Only mental health providers who can complete a criminal history background check must submit a report. Rep. Karen Krampf, R-Portage, said the proposed change is a good idea, but a problematic approach. "Based on the new law, an adolescent may be deemed an adult sexual predator if they have committed a sexually predatory act at the age of 18, rather than age 16," Krampf said. "But 16 is the age at which the individual can legally consent to have sex, and the individual already has the ability to be diagnosed with mental illness. So while we want to give everyone a second chance for health and redemption, the law currently creates a double standard." So, why a shift in the law? Michigan does not have a juvenile justice system, so the age difference is critical to determining whether a person is considered mentally ill enough to be included in the sex offender registry. Most mental health providers do background checks on consumers. According to the latest Michigan Medical Society Board of Directors' Annual Report, the Board regulates the practice of medicine in the state and monitors conduct among medical licensees. From January 2015 through January 2017, the Board received reports of 570 complaints concerning the actions of physicians, osteopaths, dentists, chiropractors and podiatric physicians. About 90 percent of the reports involved matters that were alleged violations of the advertising rules and standards of practice, while the rest involved complaints of unprofessional and unethical conduct. According to the Board's 2017 Annual Report, there were 5,814 disciplinary actions taken against physicians and dentists in the 2016 calendar year. The Board made 22 summary suspensions, revoked five medical licenses and permanently restricted 51 licenses. In addition, the Board reprimanded or admonished 273 licensees. As recently as November 2017, the Michigan State Board of Canv
