I just find it amusing how just a few years ago mathematicians couldn't understand the problems in financial markets because they had never encountered them, and now they are doing deals with the same corporations that destroyed the world economy: If people had refused to work for companies that created the machine that destroyed the economy because it had a reputation for deceitfulness, there would be a world of creativity and productive work in the world today. Also the fact that we live in a time where the human race will develop and profit from the findings of mathematics should have us rejoicing and not worrying about its regression. Edit: For the record, I love mathematics. I just don't like seeing people accept mathematical arguments uncritically. I encourage mathy people to be critical. I also encourage them to be critical of themselves and constantly ask if they haven't missed a step in their thinking. ~~~ helveticaman When you see problems that math can solve, it makes you more aware of the need for it in our lives. It doesn't make any sense to have a society run by numbers, because numbers are numbers. That's all they are. ~~~ genezer > it makes you more aware of the need for it in our lives. It does, but only once the math becomes an emotional attachment to the subject. The math is just a means to an end. It needs to be used just like any other technology. It's worth using, but it isn ba244e880a
