(Getty Images file photo) Dominican Rep. Angel Urena has gained a reputation in the Dominican Republic as an activist and supporter of social programs and equality. (Getty Images file photo) NEW YORK (CNNMoney) -- The last time you heard a Dominican Republic politician sounding off on immigration policy, it was the United States threatening to cut off aid to the island nation. Now that has happened, and the effects are being felt at the local level. A member of the New Progressive Party (PNP) in the Dominican Republic recently won the district for which he ran by promising to fight for the interests of the country's Haitian and African migrant workers. A new Amnesty International report accuses the Dominican Republic's migration police of mistreating Haitian migrants, noting that they use "extreme force" and even "assault them in front of children." Urena's surprise win in the district of Sabaneta has stirred up the immigration issue in the Dominican Republic, where unemployment and an aging population have created an increasingly dangerous climate for migrants. "Policies and programs should be based on values. Haiti and Africa are suffering because of our own internal problems," Urena told the Associated Press. Dumping American aid For years, the Dominican Republic has been courted by the United States for aid in the form of remittances from its more than 1.
