The Green Party of Texas today is making good on its commitment to run a gubernatorial candidate from within the party that is committed to expanding its ranks, diversity and sustainability. Texas will be the first state in the country to have a candidate vying for governor who has pledged to abolish the death penalty, implement universal health care, put a moratorium on executions and a permanent ban on the use of solitary confinement. The party's nominee will also embrace criminal justice reform and its priorities will include implementing renewable energy sources, creating renewable energy jobs, protecting immigrants from deportation and restoring voting rights. Party members and supporters have chosen Justin Nelson, a resident of Galveston County and a former U.S. Army captain, as the nominee for the 2018 Texas Gubernatorial election. "The Green Party of Texas is committed to expanding the party's ranks, diversity and sustainability. We will run a governor who is committed to enacting a moratorium on the death penalty, universal health care, a permanent ban on the use of solitary confinement, criminal justice reform and renewable energy," said Nelson. "I would be honored to have the support of the Green Party of Texas. We need to expand the party to ensure our elected officials are accountable to the entire state, not just the people who dominate the news." Nelson is the chair of the Libertarian Party of Texas and former candidate for the Libertarian Party presidential nomination. He has been actively involved in the campaign to abolish the death penalty in Texas. His experience in the military includes serving as a platoon leader in the United States Army
