possible adverse effects on other systems. We sought to determine the association of statin use and the risk of subsequent kidney disease. We conducted a case-control study of new cases of incident chronic kidney disease (CKD) or end-stage renal disease (ESRD) and two population-based controls per case enrolled in the Longitudinal Health Insurance Database 2000 in Taiwan. Cases and controls were matched by age, sex, and index year of case or control enrollment, respectively. The statin exposure was defined as a statin use of more than 180 days within 6 months of the index date. A total of 288 incident CKD cases and 870 controls were enrolled. After multivariate adjustment, the risk of CKD was significantly reduced in patients receiving statins (adjusted odds ratio, 0.34; 95% CI, 0.13-0.89). The protective effect of statin use was present in the subgroups of those with anemia, hypertension, diabetes, cardiovascular disease, or hypercholesterolemia. The present study is the first to assess the association between statin use and risk of subsequent CKD. Our results suggested that statins may decrease the risk of CKD. Further studies are warranted to evaluate the long-term effects of statins on kidney disease.Isolation and characterization of acid-stable cytosine-containing nucleotides. Acid-stable cytosine-containing nucleotides were isolated from calf thymus DNA and then purified by DEAE-Sephadex A-25 chromatography. The compounds were characterized by UV spectrophotometry, 1H NMR spectroscopy, IR spectroscopy, mass spectrometry, and FAB mass spectrometry. The structures of all compounds are described as 5'-deoxy-5'-(N4-methyl-2'-deoxycytidine), 5'-deoxy-5'-[N4-methyl-(N3-methylcarboxy)cytidine], 5'-deoxy-5'-[N4-methyl-(N3-acetylcarboxy)cytidine], and 5'-deoxy-5'-(N4-methyl-N3-propionylcarboxy
