The Conservatives have turned education, health and social care into a chain of internal combustion engines, with each sector doing as much as possible to increase its own profit. This has had inevitable effects, which in recent years have torn the web of public services that were supposed to guarantee a life of dignity and security for all in favour of a system that increasingly relies on privatised health services for which the public pay £35bn a year. This was all the easier because New Labour allowed it to happen, as it allowed its sale of public services to the US security services, private equity and giant tobacco companies to continue unimpeded. The Tories have put a great deal of effort into ensuring that this “reform” agenda is not too obviously visible, but it would be a mistake to think that this wasn’t going on. The enduring effect of New Labour’s embrace of free market policies meant that many of the Conservative’s innovations with the NHS – such as the £20bn PFI deals to build out new hospitals and services in the north of England – were even more obvious than they would have been if the NHS had been a proper state enterprise. Even the scrapping of prescription charges, despite costing the NHS £400m a year, was in the interest of helping corporate profit taking. The number of patients in England who were still charged for prescriptions in 2010 was 285,000. By 2014 that number had dropped to 35,000, even though the NHS had only benefited from £2.3bn in savings from the decision. That didn’t surprise Chris Ham. He was chairman of a pharmaceuticals company that won contracts to supply community prescription services in Liverpool, Manchester

I decided to make my first video "chipmunk", because I use this usually for fun. Better not say too much, I guess. I started on Friday, after a week of working on stories, just to relax and make the best possible video. 09e8f5149f

My name is Sam Coates. I'm a sophomore at Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut. In the fall, I will be studying computer science and software engineering. I'm very active in the community. I have been doing some computer programming for a while, and I thought it might be fun to create a program to help people add songs to their gaming experience. This app is called "chipmachine" and it was built in Java. I have been using the code that I learned in this class to make this, and it has been my first experience using Java. I hope you enjoy my application, and I hope it helps you with your projects. This is a 4/5 William Ignasiak January 10th, 2016 Honestly I really didn't like this app. It doesn't even work at all. This is a 5/5 sophia November 20th, 2015 this is my first java app I have ever made or have to do any project on It works pretty well This is a 5/5 Isabelle August 5th, 2015 I really liked this app, it's pretty cute with simple features, there are some glitches though. When you hit a song it doesn't go the other song until you hit the back button. There are some songs that don't go to the other songs. As far as being able to add more songs to the list I couldn't do that. It needs some work on it. This is a 4/5 Roziue Matias August 27th, 2014 I love it! I love it when I realized that you can listen to music that came out way back. So I started to listen to my favorite songs that came out before I was born. This app worked pretty well so I have to rate this 5 out of 5. This is a 5/5 Brett May 31st, 2014 I like chipmachines music player, because it's kinda like that arcade machine that you had as a kid, and the music is old but it's still fun to listen to. This is a 5/5 Giovanni Granata April 5th, 2014 Honestly, I enjoyed the app, and the user interface has been more than enough for me. This is a 5/5 Niki May 30th, 2013 Very easy to use. This is a
