2016: Tarcisio Nardone Tarcisio Nardone welcomes the challenge of being a new coach to the team. As a teacher of classical dance, he was born into a family of dancers. His mother is a professional dancer, and his father, an actors' academy and a sports school teacher, is fond of telling legends and myths about the Games. Tarcisio has been at his post since 2008. He joined

CT angiography and MRI in the pre-operative evaluation of the portal vein. The purpose of our prospective study was to assess the accuracy of pre-operative CT angiography (CTA) in the pre-operative planning of the portal vein. CTA was carried out on 26 patients with small hepatocellular carcinoma. All of these patients had a pre-operative MRI scan before scheduled liver resection. CTA and MR images were analyzed in consensus by two radiologists using a four-point scoring system. The sensitivity and specificity of CTA were 100 and 100% in detecting the portal vein, while the sensitivity and specificity of MR imaging were 76 and 69%, respectively. However, CTA was judged to be less effective than MRI in evaluating the periportal veins. CTA had a tendency to overestimate the volume of the portal vein (4.4% of the total volume). This did not affect the assessment of the arterial vascularity. When compared with other studies using spiral CT and MR imaging with one-dimensional portography, our study showed that CTA is a noninvasive imaging modality of reasonable accuracy in assessment of the arterial and portal vascularity. Evidence that MHC II loci in X chromosome inactivation escape XCI and are subject to differential gene expression. Mammalian sex chromosomes are usually thought to escape X chromosome inactivation (XCI) and to remain transcriptionally active throughout the life of an organism. Little is known about the fate of the X chromosome bearing the major histocompatibility complex (MHC) genes during this process. Here, we study expression of the MHC class II genes of the B*4408 allele family in mice. In contrast to classical XCI, these MHC class II genes escape XCI. As a consequence, the spliced MHC II transcripts in females are subject to XCI and are expressed to different extents in distinct tissues. However, in certain tissues the unprocessed mRNA is also expressed, indicating that the X chromosome bearing the MHC II alleles escapes XCI to a greater extent than the one bearing alleles for the classical class II loci. Thus, our data suggest a more complex mechanism of XCI than previously thought and suggest that the X chromosomes bearing MHC class II loci may escape XCI to an extent that is increased relative to other genes in the X chromosome.
