On the third anniversary of his death, Michael Jackson fans are still trying to understand how he died. Was it a suspicious drug overdose? Was it an accident? Was it a murder? Or did Jackson just get sick and die? No one knows for sure. But new theories are popping up in an attempt to figure it out. The most popular theory, one that has spawned many books and movies, is that Jackson died from an accidental drug overdose. In 2007, Jackson was given the antidote Narcan, an anti-overdose drug, by a doctor after he suffered a cardiac arrhythmia. Since then, the Jackson family has accused doctors at UCLA Hospital of trying to "kill Michael" by refusing to give him proper treatment. The family even thought Jackson might still be alive today, but they are too late. In 2013, the family filed a $100 million lawsuit against the hospital and the physician, Dr. Conrad Murray, who was treating Jackson for insomnia. Six years later, the family was given a $500,000 settlement by Jackson's estate. The money was used to provide scholarships for medical students. The Jackson Family Foundation gave the money to Barry Hankins, a Santa Monica financial planner, who has been running a website called "Murder of Michael Jackson." On the website, Hankins says he is compiling evidence that points to the murder of the pop star. "I was 10 years old when Michael Jackson died, so I wasn't there. But I've seen images from his autopsy and read papers from the court case," Hankins said. "The evidence is compelling that Michael Jackson's death was a homicide, not an accidental drug overdose." Hankins says he has visited Jackson's home and found that his family is holding a secret gathering once a week in an upstairs bedroom where Michael is buried. Hankins says he obtained an alleged confession from a physician who worked with Jackson. "This person said he did a postmortem exam on Michael Jackson and he found several bruises that didn't look like they were caused by accidental injuries. He said Michael Jackson's family was afraid to bury him for fear of being killed themselves," Hankins said. Hankins says he has turned over the information to the police, but he admits he is not sure if they will take his lead. "I'm more of a computer nerd than a criminal lawyer. My intent is not to say
