A series of quinolone-based  $\alpha,\beta$ -unsaturated ketones have been efficiently synthesized in good to excellent yields via Pd/Cu-catalyzed tandem C-H activation/1,3-hydrogen shift. The reaction provides an alternative approach for  $\alpha,\beta$ -unsaturated ketones and is particularly valuable for the construction of quinolone-based natural products.EXCLUSIVE: Lionsgate and filmmaker Peyton Reed are back in business on a sequel to 2016's hit comedy franchise The Secret Life of Pets. The studio has taken out an early development deal on the project with directors David Wain and Josh Appelbaum writing, with original co-creator Chris Savino set to return to pen the script. I've learned that a key part of the deal is an end-of-rights deal that, while not unusual, is the first such deal to be secured by the filmmakers in months. As I've reported, the studio had been under the impression that no one would get to them on the rights for the property, which is ultimately controlled by Universal, but it became clear after 2016's film that the original co-producers, including Warner Bros.' Greg Silverman, needed to continue to produce movies in the franchise. I hear that the early development deal was sparked because they wanted to ensure that the filmmakers would have control of the future projects, and to that end, a studio that knows how to make its money from developing properties, like Warners, can't have any interference from outside parties. It's a move that proves just how valuable the co-producers are to the overall franchise. The deal secures that Savino and his partners will be able to create the sequel, as well as future films, without some of the limitations that would typically be placed on a property that has another major studio behind it. Universal is keen to be in business with the filmmakers again, and has been supportive of the deal.
