Field of the Invention The present invention relates to utility cranes and more specifically, to a diverter assembly for a bucket of a utility crane for moving the bucket in one or more directions. 2. Description of Related Art Utility cranes are often assembled from multiple components, such as a hoist, boom, and bucket. It is known to position the bucket in different positions on the hoist, using a diverter assembly. The diverter assembly includes a link-type mechanism with two pivoting members where one member moves with the bucket and the other member moves with the hoist. Typically, the bucket is positioned on the hoist using a conventional diverter mechanism that positions the bucket in one or more vertically aligned positions. The diverter mechanism may include a pair of links that pivot about pivot links of the hoist. The link-type mechanism typically includes a link that moves relative to the hoist and a pair of pivot links between the bucket and the link. The linkage pivots in a vertical plane so that the bucket may be lowered toward the ground or elevated above the ground. An example of such a diverter assembly is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No
