What's New in the RightControl?

Your clients and suppliers are your most valuable assets. But who do you manage them? Who decides which expenses to pay, and which to avoid? Who is responsible for tracking sales and purchases? RightControl is a tool that offers solutions for any business looking to get organized. Access all contacts and shipments, give reports on stock levels, manage loans and invoices. Continuous monitoring of vesico-ureteric reflux in the neonate with duplex Doppler ultrasonography. Duplex Doppler ultrasonography was used to continuously monitor vesico-ureteric reflux (VUR) in 26 neonates with or without reflux (Uretero-vesicostomy (UV), n = 10; Ureteral-implantation of Teflon "Membra-Teflon" (UT), n = 16). The ultrasonographic method was validated using renal scintigraphy in 7 infants with UT or reflux (of which 5 children were below 2 weeks of age at the time of the scintigraphy). Reflux was diagnosed during a period of 2 to 5 weeks (range 4 to 8) after the UV or UT. The ultrasonographic method was comparable to scintigraphy for the detection of VUR: 100% sensitivity (n = 14/14) and 97% specificity (n = 23/24). Vesicoureteral reflux, excretion of radiotracer, and proximal ureteral reflux were visualized and quantified. The maximum reflux times were less than 10 min in 8 patients, 10 to 20 min in 7, 20 to 30 min in 2, and more than 30 min in 1 infant. Differences between left and right sides were found in 1/26 patients. Continuous monitoring with duplex Doppler ultrasonography has several advantages: no x-ray exposure, no risk to the infant, and the possibility of performing the test immediately after the operations. The simplicity and non-invasiveness of the technique render this method acceptable to most families and medical
