By Rick Jervis The Washington Post The Ebola outbreak in West Africa has exploded since late 2013, with a past peak of 2,908 confirmed and probable cases and 1,368 deaths recorded in March this year. That was the highest number of cases and deaths since the disease re-emerged in 1976, when there were about 200,000 cases and 50,000 deaths. The World Health Organization said Thursday that Ebola cases were on the rise in Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria, Senegal and Sierra Leone. That brings the total number of cases reported or confirmed in the four countries to at least 4,892. The outbreak has exacted a heavy toll in terms of lives lost and disease-related pain and suffering. In the past, the death rate in cases of Ebola hemorrhagic fever was about 60 percent. But unlike the case with the AIDS epidemic, the world has made enormous strides in fighting against the disease. The WHO's Ebola outbreak dashboard indicates that the fatality rate at this point is about 42 percent. The international community stepped up to the plate with the outbreak to stave off further outbreaks and the possibility of the disease traveling outside of the affected areas. After the 2009 "swine flu" outbreak in Mexico and North America, WHO sent teams in to Sierra Leone to analyze their disease surveillance, and also launched a $10 million emergency fund to combat the outbreak. “The epidemic in West Africa right now is the largest in history and the biggest challenge in terms of response,” said Dr. Paul Hunter, director of the emerging diseases lab at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. “It’s a major challenge. When they are just gathering information, it's hard." By March 15, there were 55,852 laboratory-confirmed cases of Ebola, but that number is expected to increase because not all cases are tested, according to the WHO. The U.S. government has denied an Ebola epidemic exists in the United States. Despite that statement, the nation is preparing for a possible outbreak. Last month, Texas

Gov. Rick Perry activated the Texas National Guard to assist local medical professionals with the Ebola response, as Ebola cases have increased in Dallas, the state's second-largest city. On Wednesday, U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, Sylvia Mathews Burwell, said there

Hydro-electric power systems are proposed for exploiting rivers such as the Amazon River in Brazil, with massive irrigation dams, to supply electric power, in particular to develop the Amazon region economically. Accurate knowledge of environmental and ecological variables and their trends at different river stages and size scales are needed to assess the potential of this environmental system, the vulnerability to climate change and to hydropower developments, and to provide reference data for the development and management of the river and its power systems. We propose an integrated ecohydro-demographic modelling of the river and its power system, focusing on demographic rates and their changing trends within river regions. The primary objective of the modelling is to provide preliminary estimates of the future effects of climate change on: (1) the extent of the river region, (2) human settlement patterns and population density, (3) fishery production, (4) water quality and (5) the potential of river power generation. The model is driven by environmental data on river stages, river discharge, flood frequency, temperature, and the availability of water resources in the river catchment. The model is based on GIS data of flow and stage of the river, and on water resource maps, demography, literature data, and knowledge of river-related natural resources. The model will be calibrated with the available data. The objectives of the project are to map variations of river discharge and river stages in the river basin of the Amazon, to track key demographic indicators at the basin scale, and to perform a preliminary analysis on the potential of hydroelectric power generation and on the vulnerability of the Amazonian river populations to climate change. The American Museum of Natural History in New York is set to embark on a "panda craze" this spring to coincide with the arrival of panda cub Tai Shan. The exhibition includes more than 50 wild and rare panda species that are on the verge of extinction. Panda Cam - which allows people to watch the giant loping, bear-like creatures in their natural habitat from a special webcam - will launch in April and run until December. The exhibition will also feature interactive displays and talks on the panda's biology, evolution and conservation. Lead curator Rachel Swisher said the exhibition was due to run from 28 February through 12 December. More than 10,000 visitors are expected to travel to New York each year, according to the museum's website.

"This is a wild animal," Ms Swisher said
