Due to the lack of comprehensive information about the environmental risk of pesticides used in Poland, their transfer to the human environment is highly uncertain. Therefore, this study focused on the qualitative assessment of potential human health effects due to exposure to selected pesticides. An estimation of daily intake of pesticides (from crops) was based on their detection in crop samples, and the pesticide levels in the relevant matrices from Poland were compared with the corresponding toxicological thresholds. The main study results indicate that pesticides that cause reproductive toxicity, endocrine disruption, and/or neurotoxicity, as well as pesticides that can be carcinogenic or mutagenic, present an important environmental risk. The majority of the pesticides were detected in only few samples, which indicates the need for further research. The current study showed that residues of pesticides, some of them with potential negative effect on human health, are present in various edible plants in Poland, which poses a risk to consumer's health.Q: iAd Native Ads not showing in iPhones and iPads having iOS 13 I have tried searching for a solution for this but I was not able to find any solution. All of my iAd Native Advertisements were showing fine and were working on all iPhones and iPads running on iOS 12. Since the release of iOS 13, none of the Native Ads are showing on any of these devices. I have created an Ad Presentation Sender ID and Provisioning Profile, and enabled the ability to serve iAd native ads for all the devices and all the situations in which iAd can be shown. In addition to that, I have the latest version of Xcode (10.2) installed and the latest version of Xcode's iOS SDK (12.1.1). After following the instructions given here, I am not able to get any of the Native Advertisements to show up on any of the devices. The AdMob account is verified and is associated with the correct Bundle ID and is linked to the correct App Store Connect account for the application the advertisements are being shown in. There is
