My regex looks like this: `[0-9]{1,3} [a-zA-Z.]{1,24}` The idea is to match each phone number as one group, each email address as another, etc. However, I'm finding that if the phone number is preceded by the string "ext" I want to get two groups, so: 1234 ext 5678 should return (1234, ext, 5678) My question is, what regular expression should

Why is my constructor not called when using super?
I'm using Visual Studio 2010, C++. I have an abstract base class called "BaseClass" that has a default
constructor: `class BaseClass { public: BaseClass();
protected: std::vector m_objects; }` Now, I have a child
class called "ChildClass" that inherits from BaseClass
and overrides the BaseClass constructor. `class ChildClass : public BaseClass { public:
ChildClass(std::string arg1, double arg2); protected: }`

My BaseClass constructor is given the argument "arg1" and "arg2" through the subclass constructor. But for some reason, when I call ChildClass("",0) it calls the BaseClass default constructor and then I get a runtime error. Note that I had a virtual destructor in BaseClass and that's why I used the default constructor for the default. But I did it that way just to prove to myself that I could instantiate an instance 595f342e71
