I'm not sure if these should be considered to be equal or not: set a=1 set b=2 set c=3 (echo $b | echo $a) (echo $a | echo $b) (echo $a | echo $b | echo $c) They all work the same way. I'm a little surprised to find out that $c is printed out before $a. A: The order of the commands is generally not specified in the Shell Standard (see answer by @Fure) but is determined by bash itself. Since the output of echo is unspecified and can be changed by other commands, they can run in any order and you're just seeing what they do. Some more details can be found here. The basic construct does look like the definition of a pipeline in the Shell Standard but bash will not strictly follow it. As you can see on my output the order is $a followed by $b followed by $c. bash$ echo "$a $b $c" 1 2 3 bash$ echo "$a | $b | $c" 1 | 2 | 3 dnl This is the C++ library test suite for the GNU Standard C++ Library dnl Comes a uncloned version dnl Copyright (C) 2001-2020 Free Software Foundation, Inc. dnl dnl This file is part of the GNU Standard C++ Library. dnl dnl This library is free software; you can redistribute it and/or dnl modify it under the terms of the GNU General Public License dnl as published by the Free Software Foundation; either version 2 dnl of the License, or (at your option) any later version. dnl dnl This library is distributed in the hope that it will be useful, dnl but WITHOUT ANY WARRANTY; without even the implied warranty of dnl MERCHANTABILITY or FITNESS FOR A PARTICULAR PURPOSE 595f342e71
