Players can make themselves faster and stronger by using the Impact Engine, which also adds more intensity to the action and physics of the game when in fast-paced situations. Impact Engine is also going to make its way to other aspects of the game, and more FIFA players will be able to experience it as they play FIFA. When you score or create a chance for your team, the shots you take will count toward your Impact Points. You will earn a point for shooting even if it is blocked or misses the target. More importantly, you will also earn a point if it is a near-post shot. Impact Points will then be awarded for chances created and shots made on target, after which points are reset for each play. The new Impact Engine also adds more options for players to control the pace and intensity of gameplay. Players can now increase the pace and intensity by pressing the Charge button while they are active in one of the game's fast-paced "run-and-gun" matches, and they will be rewarded for increasing the pace. Players can also increase the intensity by pressing the Impact button when they are in a slower-paced match and have a chance to make a tackle or a headed clearance. Additional Changes to FIFA 22 Gameplay New player animations are used to make the game more realistic. The most notable addition is the new "Talent Aspect Ratio," which gives the player a natural, three-dimensional appearance when looking at them from the side or angle. EA DICE has also added more new animations and improvements to the game's AI. Character models now have much more advanced facial features, and they are animated more naturally to help add more life to the faces of the players. The game's AI becomes more intelligent over time. Players will now read-off key plays, and they will adapt to the game's tempo. Players can now choose to dive more naturally, and players will make smarter choices when diving. They will also make more natural choices when heading the ball, which is vital for creating goals. Players are now held more responsibly on the ball, and the game's new Player Vision System helps players know where they can and cannot go. Players can also avoid defenders, and they will more often look to pass when there are open teammates. New Player Skills
