MeshMolder is a free 2D and 3D modeling tool for Mac OS X that allows you to create powerful 2D and 3D meshes for use in games, movies, advertisements, product design, architecture, interior and exterior design, and comics, among other applications. When I first saw this I thought it was just another format to work with. A mix of grisaille and color. Then I remembered how much I liked the influence in this blog! So I decided to dive into it. There are a few different styles. The first is Astrid, a very nice clean style. Second is 'John Ross' which is a mix of grisaille and color. There are some others also which are just beautiful. They tend to have a gaudy, glittery and messy feel to them. Maybe one day I will have the time to go through and study some of the programs and try to pick out a few like them. This is done with a variety of different media including: * Foil - A multilayer GIF * Back - A multiple GIF * Font - A.TTF * Video - A video clip with a male scream Well, right before I start talking, I forgot to mention the name of the app. It's called 'Mothlights' and it's just more about lighting in general. There are 3 different styles for you to use depending on the situation that you are in: sun - A really bright yellow / orange light. Wind - A yellow light that works for more realistic scenes or when you're close to the sun. Moonlight - A dark, almost greyish-brown light for things close to the moon. Also included is the ability to add multiple layers, as well as many many different brushes. If you're interested in more or have any feedback, you can view the demo at the following link.
