A list of names in which the usage is Bengali.. Means "unconquered", from Sanskrit à¤... (a) meaning "not" and à¤œà¤¯ (jaya) meaning. Means "free" in Persian.Traditional channels for dissemination of information include television, radio, newspapers, magazines, the Internet, and other forms of printed and electronic media. These traditional channels are mostly text based and centered on information from a single source. Thus, they are unable to take advantage of the evolving ways that users process information and locate, purchase, and consume products. These evolving methods include internet shopping, aggregation of online information sources, mobile purchasing and data networking, and other electronic communication and commerce methods that are typically centered on an individual. Online shopping, in particular, has provided users with a medium that gives them the ability to do business with companies and other individuals at remote locations and times. For example, a user may perform online banking, purchase video, music, or books, or engage in auctions, or to make reservations at a restaurant using the user's personal computer or other electronic device. While online shopping has advantages, it also introduces new challenges. In particular, the user is left to interpret and compare information provided by the sellers and third-party sources. The user must keep track of and access many different websites to compare the costs, shipping, quality, and availability of the products or services offered. In fact, it is not uncommon for a user to visit hundreds of different websites in search of a product or service that meets the user's needs. However, the user is often overwhelmed by the number of choices, the content and presentation of the information, and the resources required to obtain the information. Several methods have been developed to assist users in comparing similar products and services. For example, the user may browse through a catalog of a particular category or browse an electronic version of the traditional newspaper classified ads. These approaches attempt to organize the large amount of information provided by the electronic channels to assist the user in narrowing the search and reducing the amount of information to a manageable level. The traditional channels and systems described above that are text based are helpful to users because these channels' content is organized in a fashion that allows the user to find the particular information that may be of interest. As an example, a user that wants to obtain information about a particular type of shoes, a particular clothing designer, or the electronic properties of a particular piece of equipment, for instance, may d0c515b9f4
