Photoshop is a powerful tool that can transform just about any type of image. Whether you are editing home portraits, creating artwork or editing commercial graphics, Photoshop can really help you achieve the results you want to create an image that looks the way you want. In this tutorial, we'll take a look at common Photoshop editing and enhancing techniques, and also some useful techniques to get those images that are a little too good. Separation or Color Adjustment The first step in editing any image is to get a close look at it. We'd all like to think that we can spot our flaws immediately, but they can be quite subtle, and some are not visible at all until an image has been viewed in its finished form. It is always good practice to look closely at images before beginning any editing, whether you are selecting the initial crop or starting to refine the image. Photoshop has the option to create a Levels adjustment layer in any color channel that will allow you to easily see the brightness and contrast values in the image as well as how flat or dark it is. The adjustment layer allows you to make a basic color or black & white adjustment and adjust the values accordingly. Another option for adjusting an image is to use a Curves adjustment layer to adjust the tone curve. The curves are a very effective tool for enhancing images. This could be applied to a color channel and, depending on the preset applied, the effect is different, but the overall effect is very similar. Sometimes you want to use black & white conversion to convert your image into a black and white or grayscale image. This is a useful tool to have on hand if you're in need of some basic color correction and want to apply some basic contrast. There are, however, some drawbacks to converting an image to grayscale; the adjustments can sometimes be a little too extreme and can really make the image appear quite flat or unrealistic. This is not recommended for beginners and is something of a tool for enthusiasts, but it is a handy tool for doing some basic color correction. You can also use the Clone tool in Photoshop to achieve a similar result. You can also use the Levels tool to convert the brightness of an image in a channel into a black and white format. You can then convert the image's color back to a color image after fixing the levels. However, color correction to black and white is a difficult task for a novice, so it is best to hire a professional

Q: How do I enable (and disable) "Restart when Internet connection changes" on Windows 7? How do I enable (and disable) "Restart when Internet connection changes" on Windows 7? Googling "restart when internet connection changes" doesn't give me the information I want; I'm quite sure I haven't said something weird but I want to know exactly what that option is. A: In Windows 7, in the Actions (or Context) menu, when you choose Restart: Choose how long you want to wait before restarting. The image below is from a pretty old version of Windows 7 I used to run (vista) and you can see the options "Never" and "Restart immediately" This can be assigned a keyboard shortcut: Windows 7 Keyboard shortcuts For the other options, you need to edit the registry (details below) and here's an article from Microsoft that does a nice job of explaining the process: How to Disable the Restart Window in Windows 7 It's pretty simple -- when you edit the registry values via the above article, you can then navigate to the key HKLM\SOFTWARE\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Policies\System and edit the "ShutdownType" key. In the example below, there's a value of "Restart" and a value of "" (or blank), simply change the value to something else, such as "None". If this doesn't work, there's also a hack here that involves making the registry value "NotRestart" -- again, there's another value "Restart" that can be edited. Q: How do I create a button outside and inside of a form? How do I create a button that isn't inside the form? I want it to be outside of the form. A: Try this, it will work Left 1.5 inches Centered 2.5 inches

Space X CEO Elon Musk has already expressed his interest in establishing a company to build the interplanetary space city. There is every reason to believe that this new interplanetary city will be built in the Solar System. The reason for this assertion is that in July the company announced plans for a new transport system that will make our planet accessible from other worlds. Space X CEO Elon Musk As we know, these new spacecraft will be launched using a system based on the Falcon 9 rocket. This means that in addition to the Earth, they will be able to travel to Mars, as they were originally, and even to other planets. This is not the first time that the company announces that its vehicles will be reusable, something that is almost certainly very costly, but we knew that the technology of SpaceX had the potential to change so completely the way we interact with space. The result of this plan has been an increase in the number of orders for the Falcon 9 rocket that is able to transport huge loads, including the crew module that will take the astronauts to Mars. At the moment the Falcon 9 rocket is capable of transporting a load of 700 kilos to the Moon and that is the same amount as the first stage of the Space Shuttle. SpaceX's plan will be to build a rocket with a capacity of transporting astronauts and astronauts. But where would we need to go? The company knows that the time to move to Mars is not very far off and at the moment is considering landing on the Asteroid Vesta. This would be the first obstacle for a city on Mars and would be seen as a huge leap in the progress of the Interplanetary Society. It would also mean that our first contact with Mars would be possible within the next ten years, which is something that might not be worth waiting for. The Block 3, improved Falcon 9 rocket that will be used for the initial manned mission to Mars is expected to cost $400 million and that is a significant investment. That is not to say that you do not need to pay with your money for space travel, but it is now possible to order a space trip with a limited amount of money. The technological advantage that SpaceX has obtained from the developments with Falcon 9 can be exploited to transport the inhabitants of space. But how would they be able to return to Earth? They could not rely on the existing landers since they have proven to be too expensive in their development, and in addition to that, they
