Main Photo Embedded Video Comments commentsFractional anisotropy distribution in cerebellar cortex in multiple sclerosis: A whole-brain white-matter diffusion-tensor imaging study. The correlation between water diffusivity and the structures of the central nervous system has become the focus of many investigations on neuropathological changes in neurodegenerative diseases. The whole-brain investigation of white matter (WM) structures in MS is crucial to get a more detailed picture on the consequences of WM pathology. We used diffusion-tensor imaging and tract-based spatial statistics to analyze fractional anisotropy (FA) within the WM tracts in 51 MS patients and 21 healthy controls. We found significantly lower FA in the WM of the cerebellum and temporal lobes in MS patients compared to healthy controls. On a lesion-free whole-brain basis, the normalization of decreased FA in the cerebellum was not found. The results of this study support the hypothesis that cerebellar involvement is a key feature of MS pathology. Our findings, as well as early studies of the cerebellum, justify the recent focus on the cerebellum in neuroimaging studies in MS and other neurodegenerative diseases./* * Copyright (c) 2015-present, Facebook, Inc. * All rights reserved. * * This source code is licensed under the BSD-style license found in the * LICENSE file in the root directory of this source tree.
