Intranasal vaccination induces CCL17-dependent dendritic cell recruitment into lymph nodes, where T(h)2 responses are suppressed. Recruitment of lymph nodes by antigen-presenting cells (APCs) is an essential step for effective immunity, but the mechanisms that mediate APC migration within secondary lymphoid tissue are not understood. Here, intranasal vaccination of mice using a murine immunostimulatory RNA (designated IMiD RNA) activated resident dendritic cells (DCs) to produce CCL17. In the draining lymph nodes, DC recruitment was dependent on CCR6 and CCL17 expression and was associated with suppressed T(h)2 cell responses. DCs stimulated with a murine CCL17 protein or transfected with a murine CCL17 cDNA also induced CCL17 production and DC recruitment. Importantly, vaccination using the CCL17-targeted IMiD RNA increased anti-plasmodium immunity.Cocaine overdose in pregnancy: a case report. Cocaine may be used during pregnancy by an increasing number of pregnant women, and the consequences of its abuse during gestation are well described in the literature. Cocaine is associated with adverse fetal outcomes and neonatal complications. This report describes a case of cocaine abuse in a pregnant woman associated with severe signs of maternal toxicity. Management included advanced cardiovascular monitoring and treatment of maternal and fetal complications, and delivery by caesarean section. In this patient, a caesarean section was thought to be necessary because of the eclampsia. The postoperative period was complicated by uterine rupture. After an uneventful postoperative period, the patient was discharged home. Fetal growth restriction and meconium aspiration syndrome occurred, but the child is healthy and growing. This report describes this unusual case of cocaine overdose during pregnancy with severe maternal and fetal complications and discusses the treatment of this disorder. Cocaine remains an important drug that causes serious maternal and fetal problems, and the prevention and management of these complications are discussed.define(["../core", "../core/parseHTML", "../ajax", "../traversing", "../manipulation", "../selector", // Optional event/alias dependency "../event/alias"], function(jQuery) { // Keep a copy of the old load method var _load =

Q: how to use `createfile` and `createfile_v3` with simple_form I'm using simple_form and i need to make a new file with the method createfile. However, when i try to send via createfile i got "NameError: undefined local variable or method `createfile` for #<nil:NilClass". The model is "files" and the methods are createfile.createfile_v3 I have 2 tables : "file" and "file_version". The first one has a relation with the second (many-to-many) in the file_version model. I've tried to change the field options for file, all kinds of things. Here is my model : class File has_many :file_versions has_many :versions, :through => :file_versions, :source => :file end class FileVersion belongs_to :file belongs_to :version validates :file_id, :presence => true validates :version_id, :presence => true validates :version, :presence => true validates :file, :presence => true attr_accessible :file_id, :version_id, :file_id, :version_id, :file_id accept_nested_attributes_for :versions end class Version has_many :file_versions has_many :files, :through => :file_versions has_many :files, :through => :file_versions end The create action on the first model looks like this def create @file = File.find_by_id(params[:file_id]) @file.save! respond_to do |format| if @file.save format.html { redirect_to @file, notice: 'File was successfully created.' } format.json { render
