The use of phosphorescent dopants in the design of materials for use in organic electronic devices has been known for some time. Phosphorescent organic molecules have been used in polymer films, but have not been extensively explored for use as dopants in organic luminescent devices. Phosphorescent organic compounds include but are not limited to the following structures: wherein: M1 represents a Group-13 metal, m is 1 or 2, L is a Lewis Base, X is either C or N, A1 is either C or N, B1 is either O or S, G1-G5 are 1,2-phenylene or naphthalene, D is O or S, and E is a Group-14 element or Group-15 element. Phosphorescent organic compounds have found use in electronics. For example, C. Richter, R. L. Guy, Y. T. Chen et al. in "Organic Light Emitting Diode" (1995) 469-471 describes the use of phosphorescent hosts and dyes in organic electroluminescent devices. See also: (1) L. A. Viano, A. E. Bennett, and L.
