On February 2, 1961, the Komsomol published a letter by Soviet Defense Minister Tikhon Semyonovich Khadzhiev. Throughout the entire war, Stalingrad became the capital city of the largest military power on earth. While the city was under siege, its population was reduced from over two million to ten-twelve thousand, only to be restored again when the city finally fell. By early 1943, the Red Army had actually surpassed Germany's in manpower and even in equipment. By the end of World War II, the Soviet Union possessed an estimated 260 million tons of strategic metals such as copper, iron, nickel, and zinc. The USSR also became one of the world's two largest producers of oil, employing the technique of underground oil drilling. The country's heavy industry (steel, shipbuilding, mining, and automobile production) came to rival that of most major industrialized nations. After the start of World War II, the Soviet Union became one of the few countries to initiate a major land offensive, with Soviet military forces conducting major offensives across eastern Poland and Western Belarus and Ukraine, forcing the Germans to divert troops from the Eastern Front. In the Stalingrad

Campaign, Red Army forces on the Eastern Front took the vital city of St
