As an Android Application Developer, I work with J2ME at times for a specific platform. When I code using Eclipse with JDK and Java, I get a nice integration with the Android tools. However, I cannot find the same in JDK alone or J2ME. I downloaded the Android SDK from the official site and it includes the Eclipse plug-in and the SDK as well. I started coding in Eclipse, but it didn't have a lot of options when I pressed the Ctrl + Space and I was not able to configure and create a Java Project easily. Where do I find the source code for the plug-in to create Java Projects and to import the Apache Ant library? I don't mind using a different IDE or developing in Windows directly. What is the best way? A: The source for the Eclipse plug-in is in eclipse/.classpath/org.eclipse.core.launcher.StandardUILauncher.jar. Fear of Missing Out New York Times, Larry Olmsted, May 12, 2012 More than half of the high school students surveyed, 53 percent, reported feeling anxious when not signed up for an afterschool activity like a sports team, a choir or a student council. “You're talking about the kinds of things that used to be the job of an adolescent,” said John Pryor, a clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of Illinois. “Getting a good athletic scholarship, being admitted to an Ivy League school. Now what do you do? Start your own business?” Many teenagers today are also anxious about their peers’ activities. And these are kids for whom social media is expected, a shorthand way to keep track of what is happening in schools and on the street. One online survey of 4,500 high school students by Nelson Nygaard, a

This tumor acquires its hallmark invasive phenotype by the transition from a non-invasive, differentiated state. Although the epigenetic landscape of gliomas is highly conserved between low- and high-grade gliomas, the cells derived from highly invasive glioblastoma express unique transcriptional programs and signaling receptors that allow them to infiltrate the neighboring normal brain. We have discovered that reactive astrocytes in the adult brain reactivate their developmental program to generate the progenitors that give rise to the glioblastoma cells. We also have demonstrated that activated astrocytes acquire the invasive properties of high-grade glioma cells in the absence of an external signaling stimulus. These studies indicate that the developmental programs of glioma cells to generate progenitors and to generate an invasive phenotype are in place but are disrupted in cells that become glioblastoma. We hypothesize that these alterations are required for the development of invasion in glioblastoma. The goal of this study is to elucidate the regulatory mechanisms underlying the transitions from non- invasive to invasive glioma cells. Our approach is to extend the studies of developmental cell biology to glioblastoma. The specific aims are: 1) Determine if reactivated developmental programs are required for the generation of glioblastoma cells; 2) Determine if developmental pathways in astrocytes promote the invasive properties of glioma cells. The knowledge gained from these studies will help to understand the underlying causes of invasion in glioblastoma and provide new approaches to prevent or reverse the tumor cell invasion and metastasis. Relevance to public health: Glioblastoma is the most common and lethal primary brain tumor, and is fatal in only a short period of
